

Adam Rose is a partner who has been with the firm since graduating with honors from the University of Miami School of Law. The entirety of his practice is devoted to representing injured persons, victims, and their families throughout Florida, and has represented clients from over 30 states and 11 countries. In the first six years of his career, Adam has successfully obtained over $165 million in compensation for his clients, including a record-setting $95 million verdict for a family whose daughter was killed and son left incapacitated by a drunk driver in Miami-Dade County.

Leading the firm's maritime practice, Adam has litigated numerous cases against a number of cruise line companies for negligence and wrongful death, including medical treatment of passengers who have fallen ill during a cruise. Recently, Adam and Thomas Scolaro were able to secure a seven-figure settlement on behalf of a European client who sustained catastrophic injuries due to medical malpractice during a cruise. Although the cruise line sought to limit its liability under the Athens Convention, Adam was able to secure a settlement almost ten times over the Athens' cap. Adam has also published several national articles on litigating maritime cases.

While Adam actively litigates cases across the state, he maintains a prominent practice in Key West and Monroe County, where he currently serves as the Secretary of the Monroe County Bar Association. Keeping with the Firm's tradition of vigorously advocating for victims of watersports accidents, Adam has handled numerous boating, jet ski, and parasailing cases, and is currently prosecuting an action against Sunset Watersports in Key West for killing a young couple after deploying their parasail in dangerously high winds.

A staunch believer in the societal importance of personal injury law, Adam is determined to achieve the best results possible for each of his clients, and to hold companies accountable for their actions. As an advocate for consumer child safety, Adam has also represented families in various product liability lawsuits, including defective furniture leading to tip-overs, defective bicycles, and failed child pool fences.
